Cut through the black line

Some of the students in Zoolandia Elementary School have a math test today.

The test is going well for most students, but not for all.

His dad decides to take him to see Croco Doc for an eye exam.

Igor the mole is having trouble seeing the math problems that are written on the board. He still finishes the test twenty minutes before his friends.

First, Croco Doc uses a special machine to examine Igor's eyes. Igor is nearsighted!

This means that he can see things close up but he can't see things that are far away.

Next, Igor tries on special glasses. These glasses have different lenses that help Croco Doc find the right prescription for him.

Last, Igor has to look at a board that has big and small letters. Igor has to say the name of the letters while Croco Doc changes the lenses of the glasses. He finally finds the right prescription for Igor.

After a few weeks of wearing glasses, Igor's grades improve. Now he can see the blackboard perfectly and answer all the text questions correctly!

Nearsightedness is a condition that is passed from generation to generation. Even Igor's great-great-grandfather wore glasses!
