

44. The Crisis

Epilepsy

Tamara has invited her friends over for a sleepover party.

At one point, her eyes roll back, and she starts trembling on the floor... What a scare!

Once Croco Doc arrives at Tamara's house, she is asleep on the couch.

The symptoms are clear... Tamara has had an epileptic seizure.

At the hospital, Tamara wears a special helmet to undergo an electroencephalogram... which is used to observe the electrical activity in her brain!

Croco Doc explains to Tamara's friends what they should do if something like this happens again. This way, they can make sure Tamara doesn't get hurt!

Thanks to Croco Doc, the next sleepover party has no incidents!

Additionally, she will have to be careful with certain things: avoiding screens, staying relaxed...

The brain has neurons that communicate through electrical impulses. Neurons sometimes discharge too much electricity,
causing an epileptic seizure!

That's exactly what happened to Tamara, as the electroencephalo-gram confirms Croco Doc's suspicions.

Afterward, Tamara enters a tube
for a magnetic resonance imaging (MRI): this will allow them to see Tamara's brain and understand the origin of the epileptic attack.

Tamara's brain shows no lesions,
so the cause of epilepsy is not clear. Fortunately, Tamara can take medication to prevent it from happening again.
